

Social Work Makes Strong Appeal to South Bend Women

South Bend young men and young women are going into social work. There are perhaps a dozen interested in some branch of sociology, either in the playground activities, in the associated charities, or some other form. Fresh from college where they have been receiving instruction along those lines, they have taken hold of the work that pronounces a success for them in their respective lines of endeavor before many years. Not a few of them have as yet completed their college or university training, and during vacation time in the summer they are grasping hold of the problems presented at the local playgrounds.

This affords a double benefit: To the children who frequent the recreation centers and to the young college man or woman. In the first place the playgrounds are supervised by instructors who are being trained for such work, and being interested, they put forth their best effort. Secondly, it gives them practical experience which helps them along in college. This has brought to the playgrounds directors, which would not have been possible this year at least, had it not been that they were interested in such lines, for the salary of a director is not a munificent sum.

It is an unusual thing for college men and women to be interested in social work. Usually they are taught that above all they must provide for the individual. Now conditions are changed, and it is the community that comes in for its share of attention.

work, excluding that which deals with the slums. Mary Eastman, another local woman, who has been assisting in the playgrounds, is a student at Wisconsin. She, too, is majoring in sociology, minor in physical education. She expects to go into recreation center activity upon completing her training at the university.

South Bend young men and women have not confined their activities alone to the playgrounds. The associated charities and the Vacation Bible class under the auspices of the First Presbyterian church have come in for their share of attention. In the former branch is Miss Lulu Bon Durant, a DePaul university student, who has been handling a number of "cases" for the charities. Her duties there have consisted principally of assisting Miss Carrie Rein, the secretary, who has given up her position because of ill health, and looking after a large part of the work undertaken by the association.

Will Continue Duties.

Miss Bon Durant devoted her energies while in college preparing for the work which she is now doing. She expects to continue her duties under Miss Lela Scott, the new secretary, who succeeded Miss Rein. According to Miss Rein, Miss Bon Durant has been very efficient in carrying on her charity work, and being well acquainted in South Bend and with the city's needs, her services have been invaluable.

workers to gain an idea what they must face in following out their desire for this sort of activity. Chief among the local people of the younger generation is Miss Rose Krause, supervisor of the Sample st. playground, and at the present time a student at Wisconsin university. Miss Krause averages between 400 and 500 different boys and girls during the week, the daily average being a little less than that. Of this number one child is of German descent, the others Polish. Notwithstanding she has perfect control, and she is the queen of her domain, not because of any acknowledged superiority, but because she is in perfect accordance with their ideas, and has so much sympathy with their shortcomings.

Miss Krause has two years and a half at Wisconsin, specializing in physical training. She also took a course in sociology and work in playground department, which qualified her for the activities she has undertaken at the Sample st. grounds. There she has built up the Warsaw civic club, which will not hold a meeting unless she is present to suggest and direct. There are 300 people that come under her supervision daily. When there is an argument resulting from a baseball game, she does not go around and try to smooth things over. She just arranged another game, in which she plays, and things smooth themselves over. They make allowances for her, pitching the indoor ball slowly, fail to catch it when she hits it, and then nearly kill themselves laughing when she actually scores a run. They have forgotten by that time the heat of the argument of 15 minutes ago.

Miss Krause Undecided. Miss Krause is undecided as to whether she will complete her education this year at the university or continue her social work here.

Another young woman who is throwing her talents along social lines is Miss Olga Rosencrans, the supervisor of the Coquillard school. Miss Rosencrans, like Miss Krause, is exceptionally interested in her work, even though she is majoring in her college work in a course that will fit her for something a little different than the playground. Miss Rosencrans has had one year's training at the New Haven Normal school in gymnastics, with just a dip into the playground branch. She expects to follow up this with further instruction in the various branches of social

NATION'S NEEDS ARE DISCUSSED

Governors Hold Large Standing Army Is Not Needed at Present.

BOSTON, Aug. 27.—The greatest conference of governors in the history of the United States comes to a close in Boston today with a formal discussion of the nation's most pressing problem—military preparedness.

The leading men of 39 states, equipped with power and authority to express the views of those sovereign commonwealths, told what they believe the states, individually, and the country as a whole, should do to forestall foreign invasion.

The principal address on preparedness was delivered by James F. Fielder, governor of New Jersey. Gov. Fielder addressed the conference on "the relation of the state to national defense." He advocated a greater army and navy and development of state militia.

Gov. Edward F. Dunne of Illinois led the general discussion on preparedness which followed the Fielder paper. He, too, advocated better preparedness.

Wanted Bigger Army. Former Gov. Elias M. Ammons of Colorado urged a bigger army and navy.

While the official program marks the adjournment of the session at 4 o'clock this afternoon, it is probable the session will continue into the evening because of the importance of the discussion.

The conference will conclude with an executive session of its members at which officers will be elected and the place of its next annual convention selected. St. Louis has put in a bid for it. Finally will come the adoption of a budget for next year and the transaction of miscellaneous business.

At the close of the session the governors and ladies will become the guests of the Massachusetts real estate exchange. They will motor first to Commonwealth Pier, and after a survey of the state's property on the water front, will board the steamer Rose Standish and sail to Hull, where at the Pemberton Inn, a New England clambake will be served.

Discuss Punishment. The morning session of the conference began at 9 o'clock. The governors concluded a discussion of the abolition of capital punishment. Gov. Samuel V. Stewart of Montana presided.

Former Gov. John A. Dix of New York addressed the conference on "conservation of mankind and natural resources," and Gov. Ernest Lister of Washington spoke on "conservation of natural resources."

The leading speakers advocated a citizen soldiery to be maintained by the states with large appropriations from the federal government. It was declared that a large standing army was too great a burden upon the taxpayers and not necessary at this time.
